

Clarify Me please..

Posted by Dexter - 2010/09/08 00:27

I desperately need a Adsense Account. So i just made a new blog on blogspot. Planned to Constantly Update it with this ABS 2.0 software. Is there anything else i need to Concentrate on, to get my adsense account Approved, and not getting rejected!!!!

have chosen the niche as " Cars made on usa " chose that topic because it has a very average monthly and global searches :) and myself know i cannot compete with more than a lakh global searches and thats mere useless as well...

Any further tips would be Helpful.... So kindly help me, as im applying from india, its harder here getting an account approved :)

Reply ASAP Carty and other SEO Experts in the Community!

Regards,
Raj

=====

Re: Clarify Me please..

Posted by Carty - 2010/09/08 08:33

Raj, recent policy on Adsense requires you to have an established site or a site that is at least 6 months old. In case if you were rejected for the same reason with your newly created blog, I would suggest you to buy an aged domain (throw away names can be found for less than 10 bucks at dp), build a small blog on it, stuff it with 5-7 articles max, add privacy policy and terms of use page and then re-submit to Google. I have got 100% success rate with this method.

Just make sure the old domain you're going to buy has not already been applied for Adsense previously.

Regards,
Carty..

=====

Re: Clarify Me please..

Posted by Dexter - 2010/09/08 12:40

thanks for the reply carty, i already own 2-3 domains, but all are 3months old, but i can wait for 6months, because i love blogging :)

is it possible to apply for adsense with my sub domain????

for example... www.bmw.carreviews.com (were bmw is my sub domain) and you sure a site with updated content using abs 2.0, updating 4 articles/ day daily... with all privacy, disclaimer will definitely fetch a adsense account after 6months?

=====

Re: Clarify Me please..

Posted by Carty - 2010/09/09 09:06

You can have the blog on sub-domains but always apply to the primary domain name. You don't want to give the reviewer another question of sub-domain ownership or anything as such. :)

Regards,
Carty..

=====

Re: Clarify Me please..

Posted by serendipity - 2011/08/23 07:43

Carty wrote:

Raj, recent policy on AdSense requires you to have an established site or a site that is at least 6 months old. In case if you were rejected for the same reason with your newly created blog, I would suggest you to buy an aged domain (throw away names can be found for less than 10 bucks at dp), build a small blog on it, stuff it with 5-7 articles max, add privacy policy and terms of use page and then re-submit to Google. I have got 100% success rate with this method.

Just make sure the old domain you're going to buy has not already been applied for AdSense previously.

Regards,
Carty..

Hi Carty. About the 6 months requirement, would you happen to know where in the AdSense TOS it says that? I looked over <https://www.google.com/adsense/localized-terms> and can't find it anywhere. Did I miss it or has their policy changed since? Thanks!

=====

Re: Clarify Me please..

Posted by Carty - 2011/09/01 06:58

They don't mention it publicly on their site. But I'm sure its their internal policy to cut down absolute beginners who may try faking clicks.

Regards,
Carty..

=====